Parents Must Share A Joint Duty

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph. D.

Most people who read this column are mothers. Recently I have been belighted with the number of letters which begin with "My husband and I have been reading your column regularly." More letters, too, are coming from fathers and more refer to the eager efforts of the mother and father to work together to guide their children, and to the many ways in which the father is sharing the mother's responsibility for caring for the young children.

Some Fathers Give No Help
I still get some accounts of families in which the father leaves all the care and training of the children to the mother, or of families in which the parents widely disagree, even quarrel, about the children. I am always glad to write the discouraged mother any note of cheer or suggestions for winning the father's cooperation I can think of.

When only the mother wishes to try new suggestions she soon meets up with conflicts unless her enthusiasm for the idea is shared by the father. It sometimes happens, indeed, that the father will resist a new idea about guiding the children just because the mother was over-enthusiastic about it.

Wife Must Be Tactful
No matter how workable the idea, if the mother's enthusiasm about it suggests to the father that she knows more than he does, and neglects to ask his advice, he will unaware build up resistances to it. No husband welcomes being left out of decisions about his own children. If the wife will addressly ask him to read an article or book to her while she is busy ironing or mending, and then ask his opinion, he will be glad to help.

In case you wish to read books and pamphlets which aim to help parents be happier and better parents, write me enclosing a self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it and let me send you lists of such.

Solving Parent Problems
Q— I would like to read to my child two years old but I can't afford to pay much for books and there is no public library within reach.

A— In any city, town or village you will find on sale, for as little as ten cents, some excellent books for your purpose. Look for some including the old folk stories like the "Three Pigs" and a brief copy of "The Garden of Verses" by Robert Louis Stevenson.

Q— Should children be sent to Sunday school during the summer?
A— No. Their parents should go with them, as they also should in winter.

Q— Should a tot be allowed to jump up and down for fun on the bed, or stuffed furniture, or stand upon polished furniture with his shoes on?
A— No. Train him early not to do such things, even if you must spank him to get results. Good citizenship does not easily grow out of such unrestrained fun by the tot.

Q— Is it well to have the child DeSelm & Schneider, Attorneys State of Illinois, County of Kankakee, ss.

perform, as playing the piano, before company?
A. Not if doing so is painful for him or the company. If, however, the guests realize that their appreciative attitude will stimulate the child to work harder at his music practice, a brief amount of playing by the youngster before the company might be very desirable.
